Task 7: Reading Comprehension Read the story. Then answer the questions. Circle the correct answers.

Joe's daughter was graduating from high school, and he wanted to have a party for her. The first thing he needed to do was to make a guest list. Of course, he would invite her best friends, grandparents, his brother, and her cousins. That was about twelve people. He also wanted to invite some co-workers, but that was a little complex. He was working on a project, and some of the people on the project team were friends with other co-workers. He couldn't ask some of his co-workers unless he asked all of them. That would be about ten more guests.

The next problem he had to solve was where to have the party. That depended on how many people were coming. For example, if it were only family, they could go to Luigi's Restaurant. The Crab House Restaurant was large enough for everyone, but it was too expensive. Joe wanted to keep it simple and chose to have the party at their house. It would be full, but people could go outside. He decided to order the food from a restaurant and have a delivery person bring it to the house, but he didn't want to make a mistake and order too little food, so he waited until everyone called him to say they would come before putting in the final order. After that, all he had to do was find musicians to play music. He couldn't wait until the day of the party. His daughter was going to be so surprised!
